- a. The Great Mosque is located in the center of the holy city of Mecca. This city's cultural landscape, imprints on the land left by humans, can be described as it revolves around the mosque, and when it comes to time of prayer, Islamic practitioners will face the city of Mecca. People come and circle to Kaba and pray towards it, and it is a pilgrimage that should be completed at least once in a Muslim's life time. The city revolves around the mosque, in which every year members of Islam pilgrimage to.
- b. Global population distribution of ethnic religions is based on the religion's place of origin as these religions are large groups of people living in a single region, meaning they will not be adopted by people who are not born into them. Ethnic religions can spread through relocation diffusion as people move away from their home/holy land. An example is the large Islamic population in Dearborn, Michigan, as many followers have moved to that area.
- c. A single pilgrimage site can attract multiple religions due to different interpretations and beliefs all centering from one holy place. The Western Wall in Jerusalem is able to attract many different religions as Jerusalem is the holy city for Christianity, Judaism, and Islam. It represents the birth of these religions or significant historical importance, which leads people from all three religions to pilgrim to the site.
- d. On-way relocation diffusion, the movement of culture as people migrate, can account for spatial patterns of international travel to pilgrimage locations as when people of a religion move away from their holy land, in order to complete their pilgrimage they will have to travel further than others who live in closer proximity. One example can be seen with the Jewish being moved out of their holy land into Europe, therefore having to travel internationally when returning to their holy land of Israel.
- e. Ethnic nationalism, where the nation is defined on the basis of ethnicity, can lead a nation's population to create tension with others coming to complete a pilgrimage to a sacred site in their holy land, and tension with those who live in the state. An example of this can be seen with the tension between Palestinian and the Israeli people. With Palestine being a stateless nation, they feel they should have control over the holy lands of Israel, which causes conflicts with people entering to complete a religious pilgrimage from religions such as Judaism.
